FRED WILSON My Echo, My Shadow, and Me

NEW YORK, March 3, 2006—PaceWildenstein is pleased to announce that Fred Wilson will have his first solo exhibition, My Echo, My Shadow, and Me with the gallery at 32 East 57th Street, from March 11 through April 15, 2006. The public is invited to attend an opening on Friday, March 10th from 6-8 p.m.

Beginning with the groundbreaking exhibition Mining the Museum (1992-93) at the Maryland Historical Society, Fred Wilson has juxtaposed and re-contextualized existing objects to create new installations, which alter their traditional meanings or interpretations. More recently, the artist's mixed-media installations, including his exhibition at the United States Pavilion for the 2003 Venice Biennale, have consisted of objects he fabricated, such as Speak of Me as I Am (Chandelier Mori) (2003) which will be on view in the upcoming PaceWildenstein exhibition.

Other works on view, primarily blown glass, date from 2003-2006. These include Mhole (2005), Psst! (2005), Viscous Risk (2005), and Dark Dawn (2005). Black Memory (2005), a wood and glass vitrine with 15 small oil cans and two large oil cans, 17 ink bottles and one glass bottle, and Black Present (2006) will also be on view.

In his newest work in the current exhibition, Wilson has made his own version—consisting of black diamonds and black pearls—of the Diamond Diadem, the celebrated crown worn by Her Majesty the Queen of England. A succession of English Monarchs or their consorts have worn the original since 1821, when it was created for George IV's coronation. Throughout its history, Britain's Kings and Queens have worn it in their state portraits. Queen Elizabeth II wears it traditionally when traveling to and from the State opening of Parliament as well as in her 2001-2002 portrait by Lucien Freud.

A catalogue with images and the transcript of a conversation between the artist and K. Anthony Appiah has been published for the exhibition. Mr. Appiah, an author and scholar, teaches philosophy at Princeton University. His publications include In My Father's House: Africa in the Philosophy of Culture (1992), The Ethics of Identity (2004) and, most recently, Cosmopolitanism: Ethics in a World of Strangers (2006).

Fred Wilson has created site-specific installations in collaboration with numerous museums and cultural institutions throughout North America, Europe, the Middle East, and Asia. He received his B.F.A. from the State University of New York, Purchase in 1976. Since his first solo exhibition in 1988, Wilson's work has been the subject of many individual shows and retrospectives including Fred Wilson: Black Like Me, The Aldrich Contemporary Art Museum, Ridgefield, Connecticut (2005–2006), Fred Wilson: The Greeting Gallery, Fine Arts Museums of San Francisco (1999) and the critically acclaimed Mining the Museum: An Installation by Fred Wilson, The Contemporary and Maryland Historical Society, Baltimore (1992-93). In 2001, the solo exhibition Fred Wilson, Objects and Installations 1979–2000 began its three year tour, traveling to eight different venues nationally, including the Berkeley Art Museum and Pacific Film Archive, University of California, the Art Museum, University of Houston, the Santa Monica Museum, The Studio Museum in Harlem, and the Chicago Cultural Center.

Wilson's work has also been featured in over 100 group exhibitions, including the 50th Venice Biennale (2003) as the American representative, the Whitney Museum of American Art Biennial Exhibition (1993), and the 4th International Cairo Biennale (1992).

As the recipient of many honors and awards, Wilson received the 10th Larry Aldrich Foundation Award (2002), the MacArthur Foundation genius grant, Chicago (1999), the New York State Council on the Arts and the National Endowment for the Arts awards (1990), and the New York Foundation for the Arts Fellowship in Sculpture (1987 and 1991).
